‘IF YOU WANT IT, IT’S POSSIBLE’:
MOTHERS CELEBRATE REUNIONS WITH THEIR CHILDREN

BY CASSANDRA FAVRE
STAFF WRITER

Hancock County Youth Court is gearing up for its annual Reunification celebration next week.

The month of June is also National Reunification Month. According to the American Bar Association’s website, National Reunification Month “recognizes the people and efforts around the country that help families to stay together.”

Hancock County Youth Court staff attorney Kelly Creely said that the celebration is for “parents that worked really hard and proved to the court that they deserve their children. The parents did everything the courts asked.”

Ahead of the formal ceremony — scheduled for June 27 — local mothers Jordan Christner and April Johnson shared their respective journeys towards reuniting with their children.

“At the end of the day, my kids were more important than anything else.”

Christner, 31, moved to Mississippi from Kansas about two years ago.

“The first person that I met down here was someone that I considered a close friend,” she said. “I didn’t realize at the time that he was on drugs — meth — to be exact.”

Christner said that’s when she started using drugs again and things just “kind of went downhill from there.”

“It got to a point where I didn’t feel like I could stop,” she said. “But, I didn’t see an issue with what I was doing.”

Then, in April 2021, the father of her youngest children, two-year-old Josiah and one-year-old Analeigha, showed

Waveland dedicates MLK Park community center to Clarence Harris

BY CASSANDRA FAVRE
STAFF WRITER

The city of Waveland on Saturday officially dedicated the community center at Martin Luther King Jr. Park to longtime community advocate, Clarence Harris.

Waveland Mayor Mike Smith said the city has been excited about the dedication.

“If y’all know Mr. Clarence like I do, and I know that y’all do,” Smith said. “All his work that he’s doing today is for all of us tomorrow. Ever since I’ve known him, he’s always looking to tomorrow. How can we make this whole country a better place? And we gotta start with this city. Mr. Clarence, I appreciate you, I truly do.”

The building, located at MLK Park on Herlihy Street, is now named the Clarence Harris Community Center.

“We want to dedicate this building in your honor because of all the hard work and dedication that you put to the city of Waveland,” Smith said.

Smith also presented Harris a plaque to mark

Gov. announces $1.2M in GOMESA funding for Diamondhead project

BY GEOFF BELCHER
GENERAL MANAGER

Gov. Tate Reeves on Monday visited Diamondhead City Hall to announce $1.2M in GOMESA funding for the city’s upcoming drainage, flood prevention and water quality improvement project.

Reeves said Monday that funding the project was “not just the right decision,” but also “a smart and wise investment.”

Through the project, he said, the city of Diamondhead will have much greater flood protection and the water quality will be vastly improved.

“We are truly blessed with an abundance of natural beauty,” Reeves said, “and particularly here on the Coast. ... That’s one of the reasons why the Coast is one of the fastest growing areas — if not the fastest — in the state.”

“The governor has done so much to help the city of Diamondhead with our projects,” Mayor Nancy Depreo said Monday, “and today we are very grateful for the announcement of $1.2 million” for the drainage and water quality infrastructure project.

Also on Monday, Reeves announced nearly $2 million in GOMESA funds to study local ecosystems and to protect fish and wildlife, beaches and sea grass habitat.

Waveland Helping Hands celebrates Juneteenth 2022

BY CASSANDRA FAVRE
STAFF WRITER

The Waveland Helping Hands Community Organization on Saturday hosted its annual Juneteenth celebration at Martin Luther King Jr. Park.

Waveland Helping Hands member pastor Robert Preston led the opening prayer and member Clarence Harris served as master of ceremonies.

Helping Hands member Althea Belton presented the history of Juneteenth.

“Today, as we celebrate Juneteenth, we also give honor and praise to God over the triumph over the legality of slavery and for Juneteenth also being recognized as a national holiday. It is very important that we know and honor our history, the sacrifice and cost of freedom and the tested and tried faith that provided hope and courage for our foremothers and forefathers. America has a long history of racism, injustice, and inequality, along with the history of fighting for equality.”

President Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863. However, not all slaves were freed.

In 1865, Union soldiers arrived in Galveston, Texas and informed previously enslaved people in Texas that they were now free.

“However, this did not end bondage, discrimination and injustice for everyone,” she said. “Yes, battles have been fought and victories have been won. Blood and tears have been shed to get where we are today. So, as we reflect on these struggles, the triumph, and the courage and strength, let it inspire all of us to look ahead to the future and the promises of God.”

Community leaders and Helping Hands members Harris and Earlean Washington were recognized for their contributions.

Washington is a lifelong resident of Hancock County and married to the late Charlie Washington, U.S. Air Force, retired. The pair had four children.

Washington was also the co-founder of Save Our Children, served as secretary of Hancock County’s branch of the NAACP and treasurer for the Democratic Executive committee.

She currently serves as president of the Helping Hands Community Organization.

Harris currently serves as vice-president of Helping Hands. He is also a Waveland native. He and his late wife, Debra, raised four children together. He is a graduate of Valena C. Jones High School and Mississippi Valley State University. He retired after 31 years at Stennis Space Center and ten years at Richard’s Disposal of New Orleans.

Bay voted second ‘Best Coastal Small Town’ in U.S.

BY GEOFF BELCHER
GENERAL MANAGER

USA Today on Friday announced the winners of its annual Best Coastal Small Town contest, and this year, the top two selections were on the Mississippi Gulf Coast — Bay St. Louis ranked number two, and Ocean Springs took first place.

“The quaint seaside town of Bay St. Louis calls itself ‘a place apart,’ and it’s easy to see why,” according to USA Today’s “10Best.com” article. “The friendly community has everything you’d want from a small town seaside escape — a store-lined Main Street, restaurants serving fresh Gulf seafood, museums and an 8.5-mile canoe and kayak trail.”

“That’s pretty awesome, to be one and two,” Bay St. Louis Mayor Mike Favre said on Friday, “it’s awesome to be compared to some of these other places. It’s amazing how far we’ve come in the past 17 years since Hurricane Katrina.

“I’m very happy for our city and for the businesses and getting the recognition and notoriety that they deserve. They stuck it out through the hard times, stuck it out through COVID, and I think it’s paying off now.”

In 2020, the Bay earned fifth place in the nation in the competition. For comparison, Gulf Shores, Ala., ranked ninth.

Here’s the complete list of this year’s winners, selected by voters at www.10best.com:

- 1 Ocean Springs - Mississippi
- 2 Bay Saint Louis - Mississippi
- 3 Georgetown - South Carolina
- 4 Rockport - Texas
- 5 Nags Head - North Carolina
- 6 Bandon - Oregon

Dr. Raymunda Barnes of PRCC completes American Association of Community Colleges John E. Roueche Future Presidents Institute

SEA COAST ECHO

Pearl River Community College (PRCC) Assistant Vice President Raymunda Barnes, Ed.D., has successfully completed the American Association of Community Colleges (AACC) John E. Roueche Future Presidents Institute in Washington, D.C. His participation provided an opportunity to network with colleagues from all regions of the country on topics relating to institutional leadership, student success, advocacy, governance, and legislation, while honing leadership skills and engaging in a dialogue with experienced community college leaders.

“Completing the AACC Future Presidents Institute, provided me with an opportunity to gain insight from highly skilled presidents and chancellors in areas such as fundraising, relationship cultivation, institutional leadership, infrastructure, and institutional policy, to name a few,” said Dr. Barnes. “The time spent in Washington and lessons learned will be used to contribute to the success of this institution.

I am truly appreciative of Dr. Adam Breerwood for allowing me to attend an institute of this magnitude.”

The faculty for the institute is selected from the community college leadership field to include highly skilled presidents, chancellors and groundbreaking leaders. Institute faculty leverage their community college leadership expertise and field-based practical skills to formulate new paradigms while securing foundations that shape the practice of community college leadership.

“Considering current community college challenges and opportunities, a need exists for strong educational leaders. Dr. Barnes embodies this potential.

He has a tremendous heart for student success and supports the PRCC Mission through a student-centered approach,” says PRCC President Dr. Adam Breerwood. “Through this program, the AACC is preparing the future presidents of community colleges and universities.”

Currently, Dr. Raymunda Barnes serves as the PRCC Assistant Vice President for Hancock Campus and has overseen the expansion of the Hancock Campus Unmanned Aerial Systems and Practical Nursing Programs. In Fall 2023, construction of the hangar will be completed housing a new Aviation Maintenance Program.

“Dr. Barnes exemplifies the model of service and leadership excellence,” stated Dr. Jennifer Seal, Vice President for Hancock Campus.

Dr. Raymunda Barnes

“While serving in an administrative role for PRCC, he is positively engaged in the Hancock County community by serving as the Chair of the Hancock Chamber of Commerce Education Committee, member of the Rotary Club of Bay St. Louis, and member of both the Ochsner Health Board of Directors and the Coast Electric Advisory Board.”

AACC provides a variety of resources for member community colleges. The organization serves as a national informational resource, leverages funding opportunities for innovative programs, offers professional development and networking initiatives, and encourages a shared commitment to the community college movement. AACC is governed by a 32-member Board of Directors, which acts on behalf of the institutional members in its national advocacy role.

Plant butterfly weed species to provide monarch habitat

Most gardens and landscapes are planned for either beauty or utility. We want pretty places to live in and look at, and we like to eat fresh fruit and produce that we have grown.

But there are other reasons to prepare a garden or landscape. One of the most fun and rewarding reasons is to make room for butterflies and other pollinators. Today, I want to talk about how to make your landscape welcoming to monarch butterflies.

The monarch butterfly could be called America’s Butterfly. Although it is found outside this continent, the North American monarch is one of the most recognizable and loved of all insects. The annual migration of the North American monarch is one of the most unusual, as it is the only insect known to make a two-way migration, similar to that of migrating birds.

Monarch butterflies living in eastern North America have a second home in the Sierra Madre Mountains of Mexico. Monarchs living in the West overwinter in California. These beautiful insects successfully navigate a trip of up to 3,000 miles twice in their brief lifetimes.

You probably easily recognize the brilliant coloring of the large monarch butterflies. They have two sets of deep-orange wings with black borders and veins, and white spots along the edges. As a caterpillar, it striped in yellow, black and white bands and reach up to 2 inches long before it becomes a light-green chrysalis with tiny, yellow spots.

As gardeners, we can help them the most at their caterpillar stage when they have voracious appetites.

Butterfly weed, known scientifically as the Asclepias species, and related plants provide the primary forage for monarch caterpillars. In garden centers, you are most likely to find Asclepias tuberosa, a Mississippi native, and Asclepias curassavica, a non-native tropical plant.

Tropical milkweed, which is the common name for Asclepias curassavica, has the potential to cause problems because the plant doesn’t die back to the ground in the winter.

A protozoan parasite of monarch butterflies known commonly as “OE” can live on the milkweed leaves and be transmitted to caterpillars. In adult monarchs,

Anatomy of a Creole Cottage

It is of interest to historians to look back to our colonial period in the eighteenth century and learn how our ancestors built their houses without the modern conveniences that today permit rapid construction of “balloon” or “platform” frames by relatively unskilled laborers. The traditional historic Creole cottage was built by skilled master carpenters such as Usan Vaughn. Usan was the subject of our most recent column, and his house is the subject of this article. There are many Creole cottages in the Historic District of Bay St. Louis. Many of these cottages have had additions added to the back of the original structure over the years. It is possible to determine the approximate date a house was built in Hancock County just by inspecting the structure and knowing a thing or two about the history of construction. The Vaughn House in Pearlington has changed ownership several times since the nineteenth century. In 1958, it was bought by Shaun and Yvonne Viguere. Their daughter, Kathleen White, wrote a master’s thesis about this house because it is a classic example of a vintage Creole cottage. Her paper was submitted to the Tulane School of Architecture in 2005, and it has been a valuable source of information for this article. This classic Creole cottage was raised on brick piers about three feet above the ground. In 1972, the old Vaughn House was moved closer to the Pearl River, a distance of about three hundred yards. Because this new site had low elevation, the original house was placed on new, not original, piers eight feet above the ground to prevent flooding from the Pearl River. The original bricks used for the foundation came from the Pearlington brickyard, and the mortar was made from the river lime, sand, and water. The wood foundation of this cottage was composed of thick horizontal beams, called sills, of locally forested heart pine probably measuring as much as fifty feet in length. A skilled carpenter like Usan Vaughn could fashion notched corner joints. An array of boards called joists supported the wooden floor of the first story of this building. The heart pine floor of the Vaughn House had “tongue in groove” interconnections of the boards. Vertical thick corner posts of the rooms and smaller vertical 2” x 4” pieces, called studs, frame the walls of the first story to the nine foot ceiling. The studs might be secured to the foundation of sills by a whittled end of a stud called a tongue that would fit into a hole or notch in the base beam. This articulation is called a “mortise and tenon” joint and requires skilled carpentry

Aquatic Vegetation: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly

Vegetation is an important part of any aquatic system, but sometimes it can get out of control and create serious problems. All plants—whether on land or in, or around, water—photosynthesize. This means they use sunlight, carbon dioxide, and water to grow and produce new plant tissue. So, aquatic plants are the basis for many beneficial elements. This makes some aquatic plant growth very desirable; however, overgrowth and infestation, especially of an undesirable species, can be disastrous. Let’s look at some of the more common aquatic vegetation and their effects on the overall health of our waters. Hydrilla - is an exotic species of aquatic vegetation and can be difficult to identify because its appearance varies depending on the different growing conditions it is subjected to. Hydrilla at moderate densities increases the amount of fish habitat available for cover and nursing of small fish and invertebrates which also creates feeding areas for larger predators such as largemouth bass. It also provides a food source for waterfowl. The problem is that hydrilla is not easily maintained or controlled. Much like kudzu, hydrilla is very efficient at reproducing and surviving in the most adverse of conditions. Filamentous Algae - are single algae cells that form long visible chains, threads, or filaments. These filaments intertwine forming a mat that resembles cooked spin-ach. This type of algae starts growing along the bottom in shallow water or attached to structures in the water (like rocks or other aquatic plants). Filamentous algae often float to the water’s surface forming large mats, which are commonly referred to as “pond scum.” There is some benefit as habitat and a food source for some fish, but it is mostly a nuisance and offers no known direct food value for wildlife. Water Hyacinth - is a non-native species and a free-floating perennial plant that can grow to a height of 3 feet. The water hyacinth has a showy spike of up to 20 light purple, blue, and yellow flowers. It is a very aggressive invader and can form thick mats. If these mats cover the entire surface of a water body, they can cause oxygen depletions and fish kills. Water hyacinth should be controlled so they do not cover the entire surface of a water body. Water Primrose - is a perennial plant that stands erect along the shoreline but also forms long runners that creep across wet soil or float out across the water surface. Up to 16 feet in length, these runners form roots at their nodes. While these plants can provide feed for ducks and other waterfowl, if it grows too prolifically it can choke out other essential plants. While this is a very limited list, it is important to identify any potential problematic aquatic vegetation and consult with experts on the best management practices for controlling undesirable aquatic species. Every body of water is different and finding the best control method is essential to maintaining a healthy fishery. James L. Cummins is executive director of Wildlife Mississippi, a non-profit, conservation organization founded to conserve, restore, and enhance fish, wildlife, and plant resources throughout Mississippi. Southern District multimodal grants announced

Guest Column
By James Cummins

The Mississippi Transportation Commission recently announced the award of approximately $ 3.8 million in funding for multimodal transportation projects throughout the Southern District. The Commission approved the Mississippi Department of Transportation (MDOT) to award grants to regional and municipal airports, ports, railroads and public transit systems throughout Mississippi. “MDOT’s focus stretches far beyond Mississippi’s highways and interstates, it also includes intermodal transportation and its vast network of railroads, airports, public transit and ports and waterways,” said Commissioner Tom King, Chairman, Mississippi Transportation Commission. “Each mode of transportation is vital in its own way whether it’s by transporting people, goods or services, all modes work together to promote economic growth and development throughout the state.”

high levels of OE have been linked to a variety of negative factors, including lower migration success, reduced body mass and a shortened lifespan. If you decide to grow tropical milkweed in your garden, you are advised to cut the tropical milkweeds plants back to the ground to help prevent the spread of this parasite. The good news is that native milkweeds die back after blooming, killing any parasites living on them. Mississippi has up to 14 different milkweed species that are native. That gives us the ability to make a lot of habitat available to monarch butterflies.

The Mississippi State University Crosby Arboretum in Picayune has been leading the way in promoting these lesser-known native species. In fact, that’s where I learned about seven new-to-me milkweed species I’m growing this summer. Find more about these native milkweeds at <http://crosbyarboretum.msstate.edu/mississippi-milkweeds>.

to fashion it. The roof of the Vaughn House was supported by a framework of wooden trusses and rafters. Cypress shingles produced in Pearlinton were attached to the roof. Cypress was the preferred wood for shingles because it was less flammable than other types of wood. Nevertheless, there were many fires of roofs that originated from the chimneys embedded in a house. The original Vaughn House had two chimneys. The Creole cottage had a steep-pitched gable roof, and the ridge was parallel to the sidewalk or Gin Road. The first floor had four rooms and a center hallway. An “undercut” front gallery could be employed as an “outdoor living space offering multiple functions such as living room, reception area, offices, or a bedroom in the summer.” The outer walls were covered with clapboard. The attic was used as living space. Kathleen White was able to confirm the approximate date of the construction of the original Creole cottage. Her vast knowledge of historic preservation and her careful inspection of the house in 2004 was professional and convincing. Analysis of various clues included evaluation of the nails used in the construction. These long 3” square head nails with a square shaft found in the Vaughn House also had vertical imperfections which were not manufactured until after the Industrial Revolution between 1820-1900. The character of some marks on the wood boards indicate they were from a sawmill with a steam-driven circular saw. This indicated the house had to have been built after 1825 in Hancock County. Glass windows were hand-blown with imperfections of bubbles and slight swirls typical in Hancock County until 1875. The original windows in the living room, master bedroom, and bath were six-paned, double-hung windows that operated with a pully window mechanism consistent with a mid-nineteenth century house. A final clue was the date 1859, carved on the back of a cypress fireplace mantle. In conclusion, the history of Pearlinton and its architecture treasures are of interest to the Hancock County Historical Society, reflecting its mission of researching, preserving, and interpreting our cultural heritage. This history of past events, architecture, tradition, values, and a shared bond, passed down from one generation to another over two hundred years, represents our unique identity. The Vaughn House was a vintage Creole cottage built by a constructive genius master carpenter, Usan Vaughn. Local historic preservation commissions and well-educated architects such as Kathleen White protect historic districts of old towns such as Bay St. Louis and Pearlinton, making them a place apart, uniquely, old-fashioned Americana villages.

MARJORY LINFIELD LYNCH

Marjory Linfield Lynch passed away June 5, 2022 at the age of 86. She is survived by her husband of nearly 64 years Byron C. Lynch Jr.; four children Byron C. Lynch III (Luann), Lisa Meacham (Steve), Robin Hagerty (Michael), and Robert Lynch (Ellie); and seven grandchildren Christopher Rom, James Lynch, William Lynch, Grace Hagerty, Michael Patrick Hagerty, Lauren Lynch and Gwen Lynch. She was predeceased by her beloved grandson Nathan Kittredge “Kitt” Rom. Marjory was born and raised in New Orleans, LA where she attended the McGehee School for girls. She continued her education earning a degree in Chemistry from Vanderbilt University where she met Byron who was attending school on a NROTC scholarship. She was an active member of the Kappa Delta sorority and she continued her participation as an alumni advisor at the Louisiana State University chapter for many years. Byron and Marjory were married June 7, 1958 at the Main Street United Methodist Church in Bay St. Louis, MS. After completing duty with the US Navy, Byron and Marjory settled in Baton Rouge, LA where Byron began a career as an instrumentation engineer for Esso, which later became ExxonMobil. Marjory loved gardening, sewing, and raising her four children. She often bought patterns from Hancock Fabrics and sewed her daughters’ clothes. Any time she was not attending her children’s events on the weekend, she loved to escape to Waveland, MS where she spent much of her childhood summers sailing, crabbing, fishing and enjoying the beach. Marjory was so passionate about fishing that she was even known to have jumped in to the water going after an escaped fish on a broken fishing line. Marjory and Byron relocated to Waveland after retirement where she loved hosting her children and grandchildren and sharing the food culture of the Gulf Coast. She entertained her grandchildren on their porches in Waveland, dying Easter eggs, watching hummingbirds, eating seafood and looking for rabbits and birds. Marjory was a dog lover and had many beloved pets.

She adopted and cared for lost neighborhood pets on a frequent basis. In retirement, Byron and Marjory were active members of the Main Street United Methodist Church. Byron and Marjory lost their home during Katrina. Marjory was determined to rebuild in Waveland and spent 5 years working to get back to the home that she loved so much. Marjory loved exploring the beach, watching the storms roll in and spending time with friends and family on the pier and on the beach. The family will gather for a private celebration of her life in Charlottesville, VA where Marjory and Byron have lived since 2020 and will plan a memorial service and burial at a later date. ecutive Director Joe Spraggins and local legislators like state Sen. Philip Moran and state representatives Brent Anderson and Jay McKnight for help securing the GOMESA funding.

“GOMESA funds have already made a wide range of improvements here in Hancock County and across the Gulf Coast,” Reeves said, and the Diamond-head project announced Monday will continue to pay dividends to local residents for many years to come.

Moran introduced Reeves on Monday, and said Mississippi was “very lucky” to have the governor, especially considering the trials he faced during his first year in office.

“Dating back to 1972 — almost 50 years ago — the highest amount of natural disasters Mississippi faced was four,” Reeves said. “In my first full year in office, we had 14 natural disasters, and COVID was only one of them.”

GOMESA — or the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act — is a revenue-sharing lease between the four Gulf oil and gas producing states, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas.

According to the U.S. Department of the Interior’s website, under the act, the four states “receive a portion of the revenue generated from oil and gas production offshore in the Gulf of Mexico. The act also directs a portion of revenue to the Land and Water Conversation Fund.”

Reeves said the state currently has $55 million in GOMESA funding available. The deadline to apply for the next round of funding is July 1.

Also on Monday, Marion Waltman, also known as known as “Rolling Thunder” — a Firekeeper for the Live Oak Vancleave Choctaw tribe and Hancock County native — presented the governor with a ceremonial peace pipe.

“I like what he’s doing here today,” Waltman said. “It’s protecting the environment, and the Choctaw are all about that.”

the occasion.

“Mr. Clarence has become a friend of mine, but he’s a friend to everybody, not just to me,” Smith said. “He is there when we need him, and Mr. Clarence, we thank you for that.”

Harris said he “loved” the new name of the community center.

“More than what words can say of what I feel inside that I can’t express with everyone out here, that this means so much to this community, to all the citizens of Waveland and Hancock County, to have a building dedicated to a person within the community while they’re still here to see it. And for people of color, to have our name on the building, that means so much to me.”

Harris said that although the center bears his name, it’s for the entire community to share in.

“All of you all are Clarence Harris in my mind,” he said. “I want to thank my family, Mr. Clarence ‘Zeke’ Hall, Tequila Hall, without them, this name wouldn’t be on the wall, because they went to the city and asked the city if they would put my name on the wall. And I appreciate them from the bottom of my heart.”

By REV. C. GERALD RICHARDSON, D. MIN

C. GERALD RICHARDSON, D. MIN.

Many people whose lives are devoted to spiritual and theological reflection (this writer included) are often confronted with difficult questions about the journey of faith. One of the most common is, “What is the Bible?” The book that we know as “The Holy Bible” is a collection of writings which span thousands of years. Some of the entries can be fairly accurately dated. Others are questionable, and some are so ancient that we really have no idea of their origin. The book of Job, which is often referred to as the oldest book of the bible, was probably written as some kind of play. It is a profound document which raises many important issues about the human condition and the role of God in our lives. It is worth reading and pondering as we consider a relationship with God. It does not, however, answer every question, nor does it settle every concern about the nature of the divine. Some (mostly protestant) versions of scripture includes 66 books or documents. Others include a collection of entries, known as the “Apocrypha” (18 entries) which are not part of the old or new testaments, but they are recognized as part of the scripture by many religious traditions. Most of these writings are the product of a conference called by Constantine, who was an important political leader in the late 4th century.

These included lengthy and much disputed discussions regarding which documents would be included in the collection which we now call “The Bible”. They were voted on by the participants (mostly bishops and other leaders of the young church). Many were overwhelmingly approved. Others, Revelation and James for example, barely made the cut. The final result is known as “the canon” which is the collection of texts that is currently recognized as scripture. These texts have stood the test of time, and they have brought hope, confidence, and faith to millions of people. They hold the memory, tradition, inspiration, and much more, for those who have turned to them across the years. They are also the product of ancient understandings of the world at the time of their writing. They are important as we engage them for the effective living of our lives. These are not science texts. They are not even history as that term is known today, although some historical accounts can be validated. They are the record of the way many ancient people sought their faith, wrestled with questions, dealt with conflict, and gained inspiration as they pondered the mysteries which they called God. The Bible is not a rule book. It is not a literal testament to the activity of God. It requires interpretation within the context of reason, experience, and the lived tradition of those seeking a meaningful faith. It speaks to us in profound ways when we approach it for what it is. May we be thankful for the Holy Bible. May we allow it to enlighten and strengthen us as we live in the modern world. May we never cease seeking truth wherever it is found.

Meet Sable. This beautiful girl is a 3 year old Labrador Retriever mix who has been disappointed by her humans, to say the least. She was microchipped, and owners were contacted. We waited and waited on the agreed upon reclaim date, but her owners were a no show, no call. Well, Sable may have been unlucky in love in the past, but never again. If you will commit to this sweet girl, and show her the unconditional love she so freely gives to others, then you will have found the best love of all...the love of a loyal canine companion. Sable will never fail you! This sweet lady's innate sweetness extends to other dogs, as well as to our staff and volunteers. She could easily join a family with kids and existing welcoming family dogs. She is a pure joy, and loves playing and showing affection. If you are interested in making Sable part of your loving family, please come meet her during our visiting hours Mon-Fri 10am-3pm (Tues 1pm-3pm), or you may call our front desk at 228-466-4516 to schedule a meet-n-greet. Please bring your children and dogs to ensure compatibility.

2021 Annual Drinking Water Quality Report
City of Bay St. Louis
PWS# 0230001
June 2022

We’re pleased to present to you this year’s Annual Quality Water Report. This report is designed to inform you about the quality water and services we deliver to you every day. Our constant goal is to provide you with a safe and dependable supply of drinking water. We want you to understand the efforts we make to continually improve the water treatment process and protect our water resources. We are committed to ensuring the quality of your water.

If you have any questions about this report or concerning your water utility, please contact Stephen Thoms at 228.467.5505. We want our valued customers to be informed about their water utility. If you want to learn more, please attend any of our regularly scheduled meetings. They are held on the first and third Tuesdays of each month at 5:30 PM at City Council Chambers located at 543 Main St.

Our water source is from wells drawing from the Graham Ferry Formation & Pascagoula Formation Aquifers. The source water assessment has been completed for our public water system to determine the overall susceptibility of its drinking water supply to identify potential sources of contamination. A report containing detailed information on how the susceptibility determinations were made has been furnished to our public water system and is available for viewing upon request. The wells for the City of Bay St. Louis have received a moderate susceptibility ranking to contamination.

We routinely monitor for contaminants in your drinking water according to Federal and State laws. This table below lists all of the drinking water contaminants that were detected during the period of January 1st to December 31st, 2021. In cases where monitoring wasn’t required in 2021, the table reflects the most recent results. As water travels over the surface of land or underground, it dissolves naturally occurring minerals and, in some cases, radioactive materials and can pick up substances or contaminants from the presence of animals or from human activity; microbial contaminants, such as viruses and bacteria, that may come from sewage treatment plants, septic systems, agricultural livestock operations, and wildlife; inorganic contaminants, such as salts and metals, which can be naturally occurring or result from urban storm-water runoff, industrial, or domestic wastewater discharges, oil and gas production, mining, or farming; pesticides and herbicides, which may come from a variety of sources such as agriculture, urban storm-water runoff, and residential uses; organic chemical contaminants, including synthetic and volatile organic chemicals, which are by-products of industrial processes and petroleum production, and can also come from gas stations and septic systems; radioactive contaminants, which can be naturally occurring or be the result of oil and gas production and mining activities. In order to ensure that tap water is safe to drink, EPA prescribes regulations that limit the amount of certain contaminants in water provided by public water systems. All drinking water, including bottled drinking water, may be reasonably expected to contain at least small amounts of some contaminants. It’s important to remember that the presence of these contaminants does not necessarily indicate that the water poses a health risk.

In this table you will find many terms and abbreviations you might not be familiar with. To help you better understand these terms we’ve provided the following definitions:

Action Level - the concentration of a contaminant which, if exceeded, triggers treatment or other requirements which a water system must follow.

Maximum Contaminant Level (MCL) - The “Maximum Allowed” (MCL) is the highest level of a contaminant that is allowed in drinking water. MCLs are set as close to the MCLGs as feasible using the best available treatment technology.

Maximum Contaminant Level Goal (MCLG) - The “Goal”(MCLG) is the level of a contaminant in drinking water below which there is no known or expected risk to health. MCLGs allow for a margin of safety.

Maximum Residual Disinfectant Level (MRDL) – The highest level of a disinfectant allowed in drinking water. There is convincing evidence that addition of a disinfectant is necessary to control microbial contaminants.

Maximum Residual Disinfectant Level Goal (MRDLG) – The level of a drinking water disinfectant below which there is no known or expected risk of health. MRDLGs do not reflect the benefits of the use of disinfectants to control microbial contaminants.

Parts per million (ppm) or Milligrams per liter (mg/l) - one part per million corresponds to one minute in two years or a single penny in $10,000.

Parts per billion (ppb) or Micrograms per liter - one part per billion corresponds to one minute in 2,000 years, or a single penny in $10,000,000.

We are required to monitor your drinking water for specific constituents on a monthly basis. Results of regular monitoring are an indicator of whether or not our drinking water meets health standards. In an effort to ensure systems complete all monitoring requirements, MSDH now notifies systems of any missing samples prior to the end of the compliance period.

If present, elevated levels of lead can cause serious health problems, especially for pregnant women and young children. Lead in drinking water is primarily from materials and components associated with service lines and home plumbing. Our water system is responsible for providing high quality drinking water, but cannot control the variety of materials used in plumbing components. When your water has been sitting for several hours, you can minimize the potential for lead exposure by flushing your tap for 30 seconds to 2 minutes before using water for drinking or cooking. If you are concerned about lead in your water, you may wish to have your water tested. Information on lead in drinking water, testing methods, and steps you can take to minimize exposure is available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline or at <http://www.epa.gov/safewater/lead>. The Mississippi State Department of Health Public Health Laboratory offers lead testing. Please contact 601.576.7582 if you wish to have your water tested.

To comply with the “Regulation Governing Fluoridation of Community Water Supplies”, our system is required to report certain results pertaining to fluoridation of our water system. The number of months in the previous calendar year in which average fluoride sample results were within the optimal range of 0.6-1.2 ppm was 5. The percentage of fluoride samples collected in the previous calendar year that was within the optimal range of 0.6-1.2 ppm was 40%.

All sources of drinking water are subject to potential contamination by substances that are naturally occurring or man made. These substances can be microbes, inorganic or organic chemicals and radioactive substances. All drinking water, including bottled water, may reasonably be expected to contain at least small amounts of some contaminants. The presence of contaminants does not necessarily indicate that the water poses a health risk. More information about contaminants and potential health effects can be obtained by calling the Environmental Protection Agency’s Safe Drinking Water Hotline at 1.800.426.4791.

Some people may be more vulnerable to contaminants in drinking water than the general population. Immuno-compromised persons such as persons with cancer undergoing chemotherapy, persons who have undergone organ transplants, people with HIV/AIDS or other immune system disorders, some elderly, and infants can be particularly at risk from infections. These people should seek advice about drinking water from their health care providers. EPA/CDC guidelines on appropriate means to lessen the risk of infection by cryptosporidium and other microbial contaminants are available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline 1.800.426.4791.

The City of Bay St. Louis works around the clock to provide top quality water to every tap. We ask that all our customers help us protect our water sources, which are the heart of our community, our way of life and our children’s future.

2021 Drinking Water Quality Report City of Waveland

Is my water safe?

We are pleased to present this year’s Annual Water Quality Report (Consumer Confidence Report) as required by the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA). This report is designed to provide details about where your water comes from, what it contains, and how it compares to standards set by regulatory agencies. This report is a snapshot of last year’s water quality. We are committed to providing you with information because informed customers are our best allies.

Do I need to take special precautions?

Some people may be more vulnerable to contaminants in drinking water than the general population. Immuno-compromised persons such as persons with cancer undergoing chemotherapy, persons who have undergone organ transplants, people with HIV/AIDS or other immune system disorders, some elderly, and infants can be particularly at risk from infections. These people should seek advice about drinking water from their health care providers. EPA/Centers for Disease Control (CDC) guidelines on appropriate means to lessen the risk of infection by Cryptosporidium and other microbial contaminants are available from the Safe Water Drinking Hotline (800-426-4791).

Where does my water come from?

Our water source is from wells drawing from the Graham Ferry Formation Aquifer.

Source water assessment and its availability

The source water assessment ranks our water supply as moderate for susceptibility to contamination. This report is available in the office.

Why are there contaminants in my drinking water?

Drinking water, including bottled water, may reasonably be expected to contain at least small amounts of some contaminants. The presence of contaminants does not necessarily indicate that water poses a health risk. More information about contaminants and potential health effects can be obtained by calling the Environmental Protection Agency’s (EPA) Safe Drinking Water Hotline (800-426-4791). The sources of drinking water (both tap water and bottled water) include rivers, lakes, streams, ponds, reservoirs, springs, and wells. As water travels over the surface of the land or through the ground, it dissolves naturally occurring minerals and, in some cases, radioactive material, and can pick up substances resulting from the presence of animals or from human activity: microbial contaminants, such as viruses and bacteria, that may come from sewage treatment plants, septic systems, agricultural livestock operations, and wildlife; inorganic contaminants, such as salts and metals, which can be naturally occurring or result from urban stormwater runoff, industrial, or domestic wastewater discharges, oil and gas production, mining, or farming; pesticides and herbicides, which may come from a variety of sources such as agriculture, urban stormwater runoff, and residential uses; organic chemical contaminants, including synthetic and volatile organic chemicals, which are by-products of industrial processes and petroleum production, and can also come from gas stations, urban stormwater runoff, and septic systems; and radioactive contaminants, which can be naturally occurring or be the result of oil and gas production and mining activities. In order to ensure that tap water is safe to drink, EPA prescribes regulations that limit the amount of certain contaminants in water provided by public water systems. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations establish limits for contaminants in bottled water which must provide the same protection for public health.

How can I get involved?

If you have any questions concerning your drinking water, please contact David Brown - 228- 467-4134

Description of Water Treatment Process

Your water is treated by disinfection. Disinfection involves the addition of chlorine or other disinfectant to kill dangerous bacteria and microorganisms that may be in the water. Disinfection is considered to be one of the major public health advances of the 20th century.

Results of voluntary monitoring

To comply with the “Regulation Governing Fluoridation of Community Water Supplies”, CITY OF WAVELAND is required to report certain results pertaining to fluoridation of our water system. The number of months in the previous calendar year in which average fluoride sample results were within the optimal range of 0.6- 1.2 parts per million (ppm) was 11. The percentage of fluoride samples collected in the previous calendar year that was within the optimal range of 0.6 - 1.2 ppm was 90%.

Additional Information for Lead

If present, elevated levels of lead can cause serious health problems, especially for pregnant women and young children. Lead in drinking water is primarily from materials and components associated with service lines and home plumbing. City of Waveland is responsible for providing high quality drinking water, but cannot control the variety of materials used in plumbing components. When your water has been sitting for several hours, you can minimize the potential for lead exposure by flushing your tap for 30 seconds to 2 minutes before using water for drinking or cooking. If you are concerned about lead in your water, you may wish to have your water tested. Information on lead in drinking water, testing methods, and steps you can take to minimize exposure is available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline or at <http://www.epa.gov/safewater/lead>.

Water Quality Data Table

In order to ensure that tap water is safe to drink, EPA prescribes regulations which limit the amount of contaminants in water provided by public water systems. The table below lists all of the drinking water contaminants that we detected during the calendar year of this report. Although many more contaminants were tested, only those substances listed below were found in your water. All sources of drinking water contain some naturally occurring contaminants. At low levels, these substances are generally not harmful in our drinking water. Removing all contaminants would be extremely expensive, and in most cases, would not provide increased protection of public health. A few naturally occurring minerals may actually improve the taste of drinking water and have nutritional value at low levels. Unless otherwise noted, the data presented in this table is from testing done in the calendar year of the report. The EPA or the State requires us to monitor for certain contaminants less than once per year because the concentrations of these contaminants do not vary significantly from year to year, or the system is not considered vulnerable to this type of contamination. As such, some of our data, though representative, may be more than one year old. In this table you will find terms and abbreviations that might not be familiar to you. To help you better understand these terms, we have provided the definitions below the table.

up in Mississippi. Christner is the mother of four children. Her older two, Austin (11) and Hayden (7) live in Kansas with their father, she said.

“That’s when CPS (Child Protective Services) got involved,” she said.

Christner said she told CPS that she was using drugs and the children were taken into custody.

From there, she was given the option of rehab or trying to get off drugs on her own.

“Initially, I thought I could do it with their father and we ended up on the streets of Biloxi,” she said. “He got arrested and sent back to Missouri and I decided I was going to go to rehab and get the kids back.”

She spent three months at Born Free in Jackson.

From there, she was placed into Family Treatment Court at Hancock County Youth Court in August 2021.

“This program has actually been the one that’s helped me out the most,” she said. “I’ve had a lot of support here. It’s been a place for me to come when I needed it.”

At Family Treatment Court, Christner said, she was randomly drug tested numerous times a week; at one point it was daily.

Sarah Johnson, Family Treatment Court’s program coordinator, said the amount of testing depends on the level of care a participant needs.

Sarah Johnson said the program partners with Tulane University and participants see a medical doctor who prescribes any medication they might need. The program includes three 90-day phases.

“In the first 90 days, they see the doctor once a week, therapist once or twice a week, group weekly, and then random drug screenings sometimes up to every day,” she said.

Phase Two, participants might only see the doctor biweekly or every three weeks, depending on the medications prescribed, Johnson said.

“As they progress through the program, it’s less and less so that we can give them a little bit of leeway,” she said. “At any time, they can come to me and say ‘can you please drug test me every day?’ I would rather them come to me and ask for the help.”

Christner also saw a therapist, participated in group sessions, and attended court two times per month.

In October 2021, Christner said, her progress was so good that she regained full custody of her youngest two children and in May 2022, she graduated from the youth court program.

As a single mom, Christner said, it’s a struggle.

“I found that trying to work a full-time job, balance everything with them (kids), as well as maintain my sobriety, make sure that I’m doing everything I need for that,” she said. “It’s been overwhelming, but I’ve found other ways to cope without having to use drugs or alcohol. Being on drugs and alcohol for so long, it’s like it took me a while to readjust my mind to, I guess what you would call, normal.”

Christner said her alcohol use started when she was 14 and she was 30 years old when she stopped and then she moved on to meth.

“My youngest twos’ father was on meth and he and I fought to keep him sober for over a year,” she said. “My grandmother passed away in Kansas. My parents had disowned me and I was homeless at the time with my son. And I think with all the pressure at the time and him still using, I just caved and started using meth as well.”

She was pregnant with her daughter when she moved to Mississippi, where her grandparents reside, with hopes of getting clean and having a fresh start.

Christner said she continues to visit the staff at youth court.

Sarah Johnson said that there is an optional phase four to the program where graduates can continue seeing a therapist, undergo drug screening, or see the doctor.

Christner said that most of her family had no knowledge of her drug use, as she wasn’t in close contact with them often.

“When I got down here, I lived with my grandparents and I guess they just never suspected anything because I hid it from them,” she said. “I think they questioned it a couple of times.”

Christner is nearing close to a year of sobriety.

She said Hancock County’s program has offered the support that she’s needed.

“They have definitely kept me accountable,” Christner said. “It definitely has been a struggle. A lot of my struggle I’ve found is being around certain people that wanted to bring me back down, wanted to bring me back down to where I was before and sometimes the hardest part is letting them people go. But, it’s the choice that I made. At the end of the day, my kids were more important to me than anything else and I’m pretty much all they have.”

Christner said that one of the things that surprised her about Hancock County’s program was how “compassionate and caring” Judge Trent Favre is.

“I’ve always heard that people don’t get that lucky, the judges are always a lot rougher, not as understanding, but Judge Favre has always been very fair with us. He’s never judged us in any way,” she said. “He makes us feel like we’re humans and he cares so much about this program and all it’s participants and the children. He’s just such a good person. His goal definitely is for reunification and he does everything he can to try and make that happen.”

“The last thing I want to see is the train wreck of a life that I’ve had go down to my kids, especially my newest blessing.”

Last year, April Johnson, who is originally from Metairie, LA, suffered what she described as a “bad” relapse and CPS got involved.

“Next thing you know, there was the option from the Judge to do this program,” she said.

At first, Johnson said, she wasn’t going to participate, but then she met the program’s therapist and began her journey to sobriety.

Johnson, who said she will be 38 in July, has been using drugs and alcohol since she was about 12 years old.

“My parents were both addicts,” she said. “But my grandmother was a self-made millionaire. So everything got pushed off, it was hidden from the family and the public eye. So, in my family, it’s normal to use as long as you keep a face front. If you look okay, you’re okay.”

Last year, her one-year-old daughter Paisley was placed into CPS custody.

At first, Johnson said, she didn’t think the program would work for her. In the beginning, it’s a constant flow of meetings and checkups.

“Next thing you know, my husband starts seeing a therapist,” she said. “We start doing marriage counseling for the first time in 18 years and things start getting better. I start mentally feeling better. Recovering mentally, I think is the key point to recovery, for anybody. Because you can say you’re better, you can be clean and sober, but if you still have that mental thing that has started you from jump, it’s always going to be a reoccurrence.”

Her main goal was always getting her family back in order.

In addition to Paisley, Johnson is stepmother to an 18-year-old, twin 27-year-olds, and a 24-year-old. She also has three grandchildren.

Johnson described her particular situation as a “generational curse for drug addicts.”

She said that she didn’t think she was a drug addict and “doesn’t everybody get high?”

“That’s what addicts believe,” she said. “Everybody gets high. Or it’s not even getting high, it’s getting a little energy to do what we gotta do for the day. It just led into a hurricane, a mess. And I truly believe that if nothing would have happened, my depressions would have killed me.”

She said that Judge Favre has been “great,” a “positive role model,” “friend,” and “like family.”

Johnson has since graduated from the program, but still chooses to visit, and hopes to work within the program soon.

She has also enrolled in online courses for counseling and wants to eventually work at a recovery center and go into prison ministry speaking to the women about “trying to be hopeful in a place like that.”

What she first saw as a “big waste of time” has now become a “way of life” for Johnson.

“When I catch myself getting aggravated at the smallest thing, I stop and think, ‘what if Paisley wasn’t here? What if I didn’t have my kids around me? What if I didn’t have my home? What if I didn’t have my husband?’” she said. “This has been taken away briefly, but what if it was taken away in all?”

Johnson said that in addition to her parents being addicts, her brother are also in prison for drug-related offenses.

“So, I could be going down that road, I could be in the graveyard with mom and dad,” she said. “I have a sister and a cousin that just OD’ed on fentanyl. It’s overwhelming to think that I’m not dead sometimes. With all the things that could have happened and didn’t, God must have me here for a purpose. I must be here for a reason. I feel like if there is just one person, one family, one thought that could help somebody be a better person and recover and help them feel like they are worth more than what they are when they come here, then I’ve fulfilled God’s purpose.”

Prior to last year’s relapse, Johnson said, she experienced years of sobriety.

“After a while, I just got tired of the pressure and the things that were supposed to do right,” she said. “I have learned that having this (addiction) is like having cancer. You have to maintain it, upkeep it, go to meetings, read, therapeutic sessions, find a minute for yourself.”

Johnson said it’s important to stay away from the people that will bring one down, get one into trouble, and that don’t provide support.

“The last thing I want to see is the train wreck of a life that I’ve had go down to my kids, especially my newest blessing,” Johnson said.

Johnson and her husband, Larry, have been married for 18 years and tried for years to get pregnant.

“I went through many years of trying to have a baby,” she said. “We never could get pregnant. I had a few different miscarriages and I think that’s been a lot of my depression throughout our marriage is not being able to have one of our own. We’ve had all these other blessings before our marriage, which is great. But when you’re with somebody, there’s something about having a baby that brings you together more as a family and it truly has.”

Johnson said that she tells new program participants in group therapy, “this is your journey, nobody else can take that away from you.”

“You make it what you want it to be,” she said. “Sometimes it can be hard, you don’t want to do it. But how much do you really love your children? If you love them that much, trust and believe in what this court has to offer. Take if for what it’s worth. It will help you and your family. Even if you don’t have children and you’re on this journey, you don’t have to be alone. There is support. You just have to work and look for it. It’s hard. It’s like a full-time job. But if you want it that much, it’s possible. For anybody that’s out there and may read this, and think that they have no hope, there is hope for anybody, because if God can do it for me, he can do it for anybody.”

To be SAFE, be AWARE EVERYWHERE.

Electrical safety starts with being aware of electrical hazards. Think safety first and use these tips to stay safe at home, on the job and on the go.

Attention DIYers: There are live wires behind those walls. Use an electrical cable detector to locate them before your drill bit does.

Electricity from power lines can "jump" to nearby objects...including you. That's why you should always stay at least 10 feet away from overhead lines.

Before you dig that flowerbed, remember there may be underground lines where you're about to dig. Call 811 to locate them and your project will turn out just rosey.
